OF INTEREST TO VEHICLE DRIVERS.

Turn Out to Right to Let Vehicles Pass.

There has been a lot of contention among our auto and vehicle drivers lately regarding the proper way for turning out to pass a team or auto that is going in a similar direction. It is stated upon good authority that the vehicle ahead should turn to the right and the one following turn to the left and advance beyond the first team and then both teams resume the regular roadway. This is claimed to be the safest and best arrangement, and one that has been legally adopted by the State of Michigan, so our informant says.

The following is the section of the Michigan statute relative to the above: Public Act No. 318, 1909, Sub. 5.

If a vehicle drawn by a horse or horses or other draft animals, or a motor vehicle, be overtaken by any motor vehicle, and the person in charge of such motor vehicle expresses a desire to pass, it shall be the duty of the driver of any such vehicle or motor vehicle so overtaken as aforesaid, to turn to the right of the center of the wrought or traveled portion of the highway, and give the person so making the request an opportunity to pass, but in passing, the person in charge of such motor vehicle and other male occupants thereof over the age of fifteen years shall give such assistance as they are able to the occupants of the vehicle they are passing, if assistance is asked, and in thus passing the chauffeur shall use all due care to avoid accidents.

the visitors to four hits. He was assisted by Sweeney, also a high school player, behind the bat. They were opposed by "Thompson" (a southern Michigan pitcher under an assumed name) and Husted. Thompson, as may be expected, made a good showing and allowed but seven hits.

NOTES OF THE GAME.

The first ball pitched struck Catcher Litka on the right thumb, cutting that member entirely across, inside of the first joint. This delayed the game for a few minutes while Dr. Insley dressed the wound. Husted was sent to catch, Kennelly to 1st base and Cripps to right field.

Sweeney and Haire lead with the Hickory for Grayling and Husted for West Branch.

Clarence Johnson held the visitors down to four hits and struck out eleven batters. Thompson, for West Branch allowed seven hits and struck out seventeen men.

The sensational play of the game was a line drive catch by Haire in the 9th inning. A hot one off the bat of Husted, burning a hole in the fielder's mit.

Williams and Haire delivered two base hits.

KILLED ON WAY TO BIRTHDAY PARTY

THREE MEMBERS OF STEWART FAMILY MEET DEATH ON R. R. CROSSING.

MOTHER, SON AND GRANDSON

Sad Tragedy Takes Place of Festivities When Carriage Is Struck By Michigan Central Flyer Near Eaton Rapids.

Eaton Rapids—A merry birthday party was transformed into a tragedy at noon Sunday, when three persons, representing three generations of a single family were killed and mangled under the wheels of the Grand Rapids section of the Wolverine Michigan Central flyer, at a crossing near this city.

Mrs. Betsey Stewart, 76 years old; her son, Amos Stewart, 38 years old, and her grandson, Donald Stewart, 12 years old, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Stewart, were the victims.

The little party was riding in the Stewart family carriage to the home of John Stewart, to celebrate his birthday anniversary. When they reached the Michigan Central crossing, two miles from this place, Amos Stewart, who was driving, failed to hear the warning signal of the approaching flyer, and drove his horses to the center of the tracks. An instant later the locomotive struck the carriage and under it into fragments.

Mrs. Stewart, who was in the rear seat, was hurled more than 300 feet, was instantly killed. Her body was mangled almost beyond recognition. The other two members of the group also met death instantly. One of the horses was killed and the other injured.

SEVEN DROWNED AT RESORT

Under-Current at Atlantic City Carries Bathers Out to Sea.

Atlantic City—The worst surf disaster in years occurred here Sunday, when seven bathers were drowned and hundreds of others were rescued, in a powerful under-current, sweeping, in from a storm center several miles off coast, which carried its victims far beyond the reach of human aid.

Seven of those who lost their lives were well known in Philadelphia. Several of them were prominent in professions and business, and one, a girl student at Beechwood college, Jenkintown, was one of the most popular of the younger set of Philadelphia.

The hospitals, hotels and private homes were filled with scores who were saved, but were exhausted in their battles for life.

No Religion in Korean Schools.

Washington—All religious education will be barred within 10 years from schools in Korea, giving "a general education," by an order promulgated by General Terauchi, Japanese territorial governor of Korea, the text of which was made public here Friday by the Japanese embassy.

The order prohibits the teaching of any religion, no exception being made in favor of Shintoism, the Japanese national religion, but allows a period of 10 years for the schools to conform to the new conditions. It will seriously affect a large number of American and other Christian missionary schools which have been established in Korea.

Warden's Wife Is Murdered.

Joliet, Ill.—Mrs. Edmund M. Allen, wife of the warden of the Northern Illinois penitentiary, was found Sunday morning burned to death in her bed, in the warden's family apartments in the penitentiary.

Unusual mystery attaches to the tragedy and it is said formal charges of murder will be placed against one of the convicts at once. It is believed Mrs. Allen was attacked and that wood alcohol was then scattered over the body and the bedding and set on fire.

EXTENSION PLANS OF M. A. C.

Increased Force and Wider Field of Endeavor Made Possible By Greater Appropriation.

Lansing—Professor R. A. Baldwin, head of the extension department of the Michigan Agricultural college, announced the plan of extension work Saturday which the college will carry out during the coming year among Michigan farmers.

County agent work will be extended to at least 10 additional counties and special attention will be paid to the county work in the upper peninsula. C. A. Ballard, a graduate of the Michigan Agricultural college of the class of 1911, has been appointed county agent in Dickinson county.

Two additional extension workers will be added to the home economic extension service, Miss Anna Cowles, of Lansing, getting one of the positions. A specialist in entomology will be added to the service to help in the control of insects and pests which cause the farmers of the state large losses. Ivan Maystead, who was graduated from the M. A. C. this spring, will take charge of the newly-created farm corps extension department.

Another new position to be added will be a livestock specialist who will co-operate with the United States bureau of animal industry.

As a result of the success of the experiment of keeping a household engineer in the field, O. E. Roby has been engaged to continue the work for another year. This service consists in helping farmers in bettering their water and sewage systems. C. A. Tyler has been reappointed to continue the forestry extension work.

The increase in extension work was made possible by the recently passed Smith-Lever bill which gives the college $28,000, to which the state must add $18,000, making a total of $46,000.

LOSS AMOUNTS TO $150,000

Famous Hostelry, Owned By Grand Rapids Man, Was Largest In That Section of the Great Lakes.

Petoskey—The Arlington hotel, the largest resort hotel in this section, was destroyed by fire Saturday morning. Fire was discovered at 4:30 a. m. and at 6 o'clock the mammoth structure was a mass of smoldering ruins. No guests were in the hotel, which had not yet opened for the season.

The fire, which evidently started at the foot of the elevator shaft, was fanned by a high northwest wind and soon enveloped the entire building, which was five stories in height. The servants' quarters, a three-story building in the rear, was also destroyed. Several telegraph poles on the G. R. & I. railway were burned, putting all wires out of commission. Rails were warped and twisted, holding up traffic several hours. The railroad suburban block station burned and a score of shade trees on the P. O. Rose grounds were ruined by the intense heat.

Warden Simpson says the traffic in dope, which flourished at the prison for many years, has been stamped out and he believes the finding of these bottles, covered with dust and with the corks eaten off by mice, is pretty good proof that the selling of dope to inmates and the smuggling of the morphine has become abandoned.

The huckleberry growers around Eaton Rapids report that only about one-third of the crop will be harvested because of the frosts during May. This is one of the most extensive huckleberry producing sections of the state.

Submarine models for the United States navy have been experimented with in the marine tank of the University of Michigan to determine the resistance and the horse power necessary to drive the craft. Similar experiments have been made before for the navy department.

Otto Hammel's lumber and saw mill and the factory of Lolamaugh & Peters, manufacturers of buggy bows, chicken crates, etc., were practically destroyed by fire at Roshing Thursday, the damage being about $2,500. It is believed that the fire started in the engine room of the saw mill.

LETTER FROM STATE CAPITOL

SANITATION RULES MADE BY STATE BOARD OF HEALTH FOR SUMMER RESORTS.

GARBAGE MUST BE BURIED

Workmen's Compensation Act Has Stood All Legal Tests and Will Continue to Remain in Force for Many Years.

[By Gurd M. Hayes.]

Lansing—In an effort to provide proper sanitation at the various summer resorts in Michigan, the state board of health has issued rules and regulations to be observed by cottagers and other visitors and local boards of health are being ordered to see to it that they are enforced.

"Garbage must not be thrown into the lake," says the state board of health. "A garbage can or barrel with a fly proof cover should be used at each cottage. The contents should be removed two or three times a week and buried at least one foot under ground. No pits, into which garbage is being dumped, will be tolerated, unless each quantity of garbage is immediately covered with at least three inches of earth. The burning of garbage in bonfires is so seldom effective that it is not to be tolerated.

Throwing tin cans, bottles, or other rubbish or refuse on the beach or on the grounds is prohibited. A covered barrel or box should be placed at the rear of each cottage for refuse, coming such refuse, which should be removed to some suitable place and buried as often as may be found necessary.

"Cleaning fish upon the beach is strictly prohibited. It should be done back and away from the cottage and the refuse immediately buried. Refuse from lunch counters, lemonade stands, pavilions, and other concessions must be treated as garbage and immediately buried. Throwing refuse of any kind into the lake is strictly forbidden.

"The emptying of drains or sewers from sinks, toilets, closets, etc., into the lake is strictly forbidden.

"The relation which insanitary conditions bear to the breeding of flies should be carefully considered and no material in which flies have an opportunity to breed, should be exposed. "Violations of these regulations will give rise to the establishment of nuisances which are detrimental to public health, and violators will be subject to the law relating to the maintenance of nuisances."

Although the workmen's compensation law passed at the special session of the legislature in 1912 has been attacked from every conceivable angle, it has stood the test of the courts, and as it is considered highly improbable that it will ever be repealed, this important measure will be a part of the statute law of Michigan for many years to come.

In the decision of the supreme court rendered recently, the section of the statute applying to municipalities is not passed upon. This particular section of the law was not before the court for consideration. The statute was attacked on general grounds of unconstitutionality.

It was alleged by those who were intent upon having the bill declared unconstitutional that it conferred judicial powers upon the industrial accident board, that the title of the bill does not cover the body of the act and that it discriminates against domestic, farm and casual employees and that it is class legislation. It was also claimed that it deprives a parent of right of action for injury to his child and that it deprives an injured employee of the right to be represented by an attorney or agent of his choice in making all attorney fees subject to the regulation of the industrial accident board.

Similar claims have been made by opponents of the measure ever since it was enacted into law at the special session three years ago. At the present time there are 14,000 employees of labor in Michigan operating under the provisions of this law. More than half a million employees are protected under this statute and litigation along the lines of personal injury causes has been materially reduced.

At the last session of the legislature attempts were made to make several amendments to that law would be improved to a considerable extent, but no changes of any sort were made. The legislature did grant the board the right to appoint two deputy commissioners but all other proposed amendments were killed.

As the result of a new law passed at the last session of the legislature, the chief of each city fire department, the president of each village and the supervisor of each township in which now fire departments exist is required to report each fire to the state fire marshal three days after it occurs.

Under the new law the state will pay twenty-five cents for each report. Since the organization of the state fire marshal's department several years ago these reports have been furnished by the fire chiefs without remuneration. Last year 9,960 fires were reported.

Adjutant General M. J. Phillips of the Michigan National Guard, has warrants for half the value of 108 cattle, worth $6,900, slaughtered during the month of May for being afflicted with tuberculosis were presented to Governor Ferris Friday morning. This is the largest bunch he has been called to pass upon.

The state pays one-half the appraised value where cattle are considered hopeless and are slaughtered. The largest single warrant was for $1,750, for the destruction of a complete herd of 270 at Grand Junction.

written to the war department at Washington asking permission to discontinue the use of the blue uniform that has been worn by the citizen soldiers of Michigan ever since the organization of the state militia.

Maj. Phillips explains that a majority of the men and the company commanders prefer the olive drab uniform and if the war department looks with favor on the proposition all the blue uniforms will be returned.

The song writers and speakers at patriotic exercises will have to eliminate all reference to the boys in blue if Maj. Phillips put his scheme into effect.

Tuesday Governor Ferris disavowed any move on his part, or any plan that he knew of to test the law. Friday night State Chairman E. C. Shields said plainly that he was not expecting to test the law and he did not think the Democrats would.

"I never said and never gave the impression," said Mr. Shields, "that I was going to test that law. I was asked for my private opinion and gave it. I represent nobody and know of nobody who is getting ready to attack the law. I have thought all along and still think the law is not according to the constitution, but I am not going to test it unless somebody wants to test it and retains me as attorney."

The Kearney-Horton case will likely be submitted on brief and will not be argued, if present plans are carried out.

Superintendent of Public Instruction Fred L. Keeler believes that the schools should remain open in all grades up to and including the eighth in every city in the state of more than 6,000 population.

It is not Superintendent Keeler's contention that the attendance at summer schools should be compulsory but he points out that state laws make it impossible for the children to seek employment and he believes that the majority of parents would send their children to school during the summer rather than have them on the streets.

Keeler believes that substitute teachers should be employed during the summer months as he would not ask the regular instructor to remain in the school room continuously for twelve months.

Governor Ferris has appointed the following delegates to represent Michigan at the National convention of the Anti-Saloon League of America to be held at Atlantic City, N. J., July 6: Thad B. Preston, Ionia; E. K. Warren, Three Oaks; W. K. Moore, Palmyra; Elmer G. Carey, Harbor Springs; C. W. McPhail, Ludington; W. K. Sexton, Howell; Henry M. Leeland and S. S. Kresge, Detroit; H. R. Pattengill and Grant M. Hudson, Lansing; Robert Sherwood, Watervliet; E. P. Southworth, Crosswell; F. L. Baldwin, Escanaba; W. S. Talmadge and Mrs. W. K. Bishop, Grand Rapids; A. La Huls, Zeeland; M. E. Beurmann, Newberry; James C. Sheed, Olivet; W. E. Upjohn, Kalamazoo; Mrs. Ella Hanley, Bad Axe.

According to officials of the state game warden's department the opening of the bass season, Wednesday, at midnight, was accompanied by but few violations of the law. The deputies in nearly all parts of the state have been heard from, and the reports all are that the fishermen waited until the allotted time and did not catch the fish too small.

"This simply shows," said Chief Clerk Charles Hoyt, "that fishermen are becoming educated to the laws and have learned that insofar as possible we will make them obey them. The time was when we approached the opening of a trout or bass season with fear and trembling. We knew there would be a lot of violations."

The special committee appointed by the state board of agriculture to find a successor to President J. L. Snyder, who tendered his resignation a year ago with the request that it take effect at the close of the present school year, is having considerably difficulty in finding a desirable man to take his place.

Although the resignation was presented more than a year ago it has never been acted upon. Some of the members of the board say that in due time President Snyder's successor will be named and if no one is found within a few weeks it would not be surprising if the board would accept President Snyder's resignation and place one of the faculty in charge during the next school year.

Attorney General Fellows says that where a special meeting of a board of supervisors is called by a county clerk of which sufficient notice is not given to all the members, that the meeting is not valid unless attended by each member. Fellows contends that pay for such meetings may be allowed where members proceeded to attend in good faith.

The board of state auditors has fixed the rate of maintenance for the inmates at the Epileptic Farm Colony at Wahjamega at $8.40 per week per capita. It is said that the rate will be considerably lower after the institution, which was started two years ago, is well under way.

Warrants for half the value of 108 cattle, worth $6,900, slaughtered during the month of May for being afflicted with tuberculosis were presented to Governor Ferris Friday morning. This is the largest bunch he has been called to pass upon.

The state pays one-half the appraised value where cattle are considered hopeless and are slaughtered. The largest single warrant was for $1,750, for the destruction of a complete herd of 270 at Grand Junction.

ATTEMPT TO BLOW UP ARMORY FAILS

CANADIAN TOWNS OF WALKERVILLE AND WINDSOR VISITED BY DYNAMITE.

OVERALL FACTORY DAMAGED

Bombs Are Discovered By Guard After Clock Work Had Failed to Discharge Them Would Have Caused Great Loss of Life.

Detroit—Dynamiting of the Peabody Overall factory at Walkerville, the discovery of 26 sticks of dynamite in a satchel in the rear of the Windsor Armouries, and the finding of what was rumored to be evidence that an attempt had been made to tamper with the Michigan Central tunnel, threw all Windsor and neighboring Canadian towns into terror Monday morning.

That one band of plotters is responsible for the elaborate, destructive and fear-inspiring scheme is plainly evident, Windsor police and Canadian military authorities were quick to declare.

A defective stick of dynamite alone saved the Armouries, where a guard of ten men was stationed and 15 recruits to the Canadian soldiery were sleeping.

It was shortly before 6 o'clock Monday morning that Private Banton, of the Armouries guard, heard the ticking of a clock while making his rounds in the rear of the building. He listened, but could see nothing. He walked further and on the Cardiff Place side, where a one story addition juts out from the main structure he discovered the grip. The ticking continued.

Banton opened the grip, took one look at the dynamite and yelled for the corporal of the guard. Investigation showed that the clock was still running and that the cap had exploded on time, although the dynamite itself failed to explode.

The deadly load was carried into the building and officers at the concentration camp were notified. Lieut. Baxter immediately ordered that the soldiers should not discuss the find. Later the satchel with the explosive and clock were turned over to the Ontario Police.

Whoever the plotters were, (they apparently believed that large quantities of war supplies, including ammunition, were stored in the armouries.)

As a matter of fact, officers stated that not more than 50,000 rounds were on hand, these being reserved for home defense, although there were a couple of galling guns. The loss of life no doubt would have been heavy had the plan carried.

The explosion at the Peabody factory was heard throughout Windsor and in a goodly section of Detroit. So loud was the report, in fact, that policemen at Detroit headquarters instantly decided that another bomb outrage had occurred in "Little Italy," and Inspector Fox sent out several squads of detectives in fliers.

The Peabody factory is at Sandwich street and Victoria avenue, the Grand Trunk tracks separating it from the river front. The dynamite had been placed under a concrete windmill in the basement, at the northwestern end of the building. The force of the blow-up tore two huge holes in the basement wall. Each was about eight feet long. Through these the broken windmill, which had been split cleanly, was hurled.

The wall itself was shattered, bricks being hurled 40 feet across the floor. The dynamite was directly beneath the rear and main office of the factory. Scores of windows were shattered

Brood stopped him with an impatient gesture. "I must ask you not to discuss Mrs. Brood, Joe—or you, Dan." "I was just going to say, Jim, that if I was you I'd thank the Lord that she's going to do it," substituted Mr. Riggs, somewhat hastily. "She's a wonderful nurse. She told me a bit ago that she was going to save his life in spite of the doctor."

"What does Doctor Hodder say?" demanded Brood, pausing in his restless pacing of the floor.

"He says the poor boy is as good as dead," said Mr. Riggs.

"Ain't got a chance in a million," said Mr. Dawes.

They were surprised to see Brood wince. He hadn't been so thin-skinned in the old days. His nerve was going back on him, that's what it was, poor Jim! Twenty years ago he would have stiffened his back and taken it like a man. It did not occur to them that they might have broken the news to him with tact and consideration.

"But you can depend on us, Jim, to pull him through," said Mr. Riggs quickly. "Remember how we saved you back there in Calcutta when all the fool doctors said you hadn't a chance? Well, sir, we'll still—"

"If any fellow can get well with a bullet through his—" began Mr. Dawes encouragingly, but stopped abruptly when he saw Brood put his hands over his eyes and sink dejectedly into a chair, a deep groan on his lips.

"I guess we'd better go," whispered Mr. Riggs, after a moment of indecision and then, inspired by a certain fear for his friend, struck the gong resoundingly. Silently they made their way out of the room, encountering Ranjab just outside the door.

"You must stick to it, Ranjab," said Mr. Riggs sternly.

"With your dying breath," added Mr. Dawes, and the Hindu, understanding, gravely nodded his head.

"Well," said Brood, long afterward, raising his haggard face to meet the gaze of the motionless brown man who had been standing in his presence for many minutes.

"Miss Lydia ask permission of sahib to be near him until the end," said the Hindu. "She will not go away. I have heard the words she say to the sahib, and the sahib as silent as the tomb. She say no word for herself, just sit and look at the floor and never move. Then she accuse the sahib of being the cause of the young master's death, and the sahib only nod her head to that, and go out of the room, and up to the place where the young master is, and they cannot keep her from going in. She just look at the woman in the white cap and the woman step aside. The sahib is now with the young master and the doctors. She is not of this world, sahib, but of another."

"And Miss Desmond? Where is she?" "She wait in the hall outside his door. Ranjab have speech with her. She does not believe Ranjab. She look into his eye and his eye is not honest—she see it all. She say the young master shoot himself and—"

"I shall tell her the truth, Ranjab," said Brood stolidly. "She must know—she and her mother. Tonight I shall see them, but not now. Suicide! Poor, poor Lydia!"

"Miss Lydia say she blame herself for everything. She is a coward, she say, and Ranjab he understand. She came yesterday and went away. Ranjab tell her the sahib no can see her."

"Yesterday? I know. She came to plead with me. I know," groaned Brood, bitterly.

"She will not speak her thoughts to the world, sahib," asserted Ranjab. "They will have spoken his words and she will not say him. It is for the young master's sake. But she say she know he shoot himself because he no can bear the disgrace—"

"Enough, Ranjab," interrupted the master. "Tonight I shall tell her everything. Go now and fetch me the latest word."

"The Hindu remained motionless just inside the door. His eyes were closed. "Ranjab talk to the winds, sahib. The winds speak to him. The young master is alive. The great doctor he search for the bullet and it is dead. But the sahib stand between him and death. She hold back death. She laugh at death. She say it can be. Ranjab know her now. Here in this room he see the two women in her, and he no more will be blind. She stand there before Ranjab, who would kill, and out of the air came a new spirit to shield her. Her eyes are the eyes of another who does not live in the flesh, and Ranjab bends the knee. He see the inside. It is not black. It is full of light—a great big light, sahib. Thy servant would kill his master's wife—but, Allah defend! He cannot kill the wife who is already dead. His master's wives stand before him—two not one—and his hand is stop."

Brood was regarding him through wide-open, incredulous eyes. "You—you saw it too?" he gasped.

"The serpent is deadly. Many time Ranjab have take the poison from its fangs and it becomes his slave. He would have take the poison from the serpent in his master's house, but the serpent change before his eye and he become the slave. She speak to him on the voice of the wind and he obey. It is the law. Kismet! His master have of wives two. Two, sahib—the living and the dead. They speak with Ranjab today and he obey."

There was dead silence in the room for many minutes after the remarkable utterances of the mystic. The two men, master and man, looked into each other's eyes and spoke no more, yet something passed between them.

"The sahibah has sent Roberts for a priest," said the Hindu at last.

"A priest? But I am not a Catholic—nor Frederic."

"Madam is. The servants are saying that the priest will be here too late. They are wondering why you have not already killed me, sahib."

"Killed you too?"

"They are now saying that the last stroke of the gong, sahib, was the death sentence for Ranjab. It called me here to be slain by you. I have told them all that I fired the—"

"Go down at once, my friend," said Brood, laying his hand on the man's shoulder. "Let them see that I do not blame you, even though we permit them to believe this lie of ours. Go, my friend!"

The man bent his head and turned away. Near the door he stopped stock still and listened intently.

"The sahibah comes."

"Ay, she said she would come to me here," said Brood, and his jaw hardened. "Hodder sent for me, Ranjab, an hour ago—but he was conscious then. His eyes were open. I—I could not look into them. There would have been hatred in them—hatred for me and I—I could not go. I was a coward. Yes, a coward after all. She would have been there to watch me as I cringed. I was afraid of what I might do to her then."

"He is not conscious now, sahib," said the Hindu slowly.

"Still," said the other, compressing his lips. "I am afraid—I am afraid. God, Ranjab, you do not know what it means to be a coward! You—"

"And yet, sahib, you are brave enough to stand on the spot where he fell—where his blood flowed—and that is not what a coward would do."

The door opened and closed swiftly and he was gone. Brood allowed his dull, wondering gaze to sink to his feet. He was standing on the spot where Frederic had fallen. There was no blood there now. The rug had been removed and before his own eyes, the swift-moving Hindu had washed the floor and table and put the room in order. All this seemed ages ago. Since that time he had bared his soul to the smiling Buddha, and, receiving no consolation from the smug image, had violently cursed the thing. Since then he had waited—he had waited for many things to happen. He knew all that took place below stairs. He knew when Lydia came and he denied himself to her. The coming of the police, the nurses and the anesthetician, and later on, Mrs. John Desmond and the reporters—all this he had known, for he had listened at a crack in the open door. And he had heard his wife's calm, authoritative voice in the hall below, giving directions. Now for the first time he looked about him and felt himself attended by ghosts. In that instant he came to hate this once-loved room, this cherished retreat, and all that it contained. He would never set his foot inside of its four walls again. It was filled with ghosts!

On the corner of the table lay a great heap of manuscript—the story of his life up to the escape from Lhasa! The sheets of paper had been scattered over the floor by the ruthless hand of the surgeon, but now they were back in perfect order, replaced by another hand. He thought of the final chapter that would have to be written if he went on with the journal. It would have to be written, for it was the true story of his life. He strode things were short. When the cast was shown him the pontiff expressed himself well pleased, gave the artist an autograph portrait and said:

"I thank God that I am now done with all painters and sculptors. You are the only one who has had three sittings. Now, go. You have my benediction."

Romagnoli describes the pope's features thus:

"His holiness has a most interesting head—large forehead and cranial characteristic of a serene, well-balanced mind. The aquiline nose and deep-set eyes show force of character and intelligence; the eyes, though short-sighted, gleam with intelligence. The large, well-shaped mouth shows constancy of purpose. The chin is prominent, of the classical shape of Julius Caesar's and Napoleon's."

His intent.

"See how that dog is licking your hand."

"I suppose he wants to stamp me with his approval!"

hearth? He does not know. I shall not let him die."

"One moment, if you please," said her husband coldly. "You may spare me the theatrics. Moreover, we will not discuss Frederic. What we have to say to each other has little to do with that poor wretch downstairs. This is your hour of reckoning, not his. Bear that—"

"You are very much mistaken," she interrupted, her gaze growing more fixed than before. "He is a part of our reckoning. He is the one great character in this miserable, unlooked-for tragedy. Will you be so kind as to draw those curtains? And do me the honor to allow me to sit in your presence."

"There was infinite scorn in her voice. 'I am very tired. I have not been idle. Every minute of my waking hours belongs to your son, James Brood—but I owe this half-hour to you. You shall know the truth about me, as I know it about you. I did not count on this hour ever being a part of my life, but it has to be, and I shall face it without weeping over what might have been. Will you draw the curtains?'"

He hesitated a moment and then jerked the curtains together, shutting out the pitiless glare.

"Will you be seated—there?" he said quietly, pointing to a chair at the end of the table.

She switched on the light in the big lamp but instead of taking the chair indicated, sank into one on the opposite side of the table, with the mellow light full upon her lovely, serious face. "Sit there," she said, signifying the chair he had requested her to take. "I shall sit down," she went on impatiently, as he continued to regard her forbiddingly from his position near the window.

"I shall be better able to say what I have to say standing," he said significantly.

"Do you expect me to plead with you for forgiveness?" she inquired, with an unmistakable look of surprise.

"You may save yourself the humiliation of such—"

"But you are very gravely mistaken," she interrupted. "I shall ask nothing of you."

"Then we need not prolong the—"

"I have come to explain, not to plead," she went on resolutely. "I want to tell you why I married you. You will not find it a pleasant story, nor will you be proud of your conquest. It will not be necessary for you to turn me out of your house. I entered it with the determination to leave it in my own good time. I think you would better sit down."

He looked at her fixedly for a moment, as if striving to materialize a thought that lay somewhere in the back of his mind. He was vaguely conscious of an impression that he could unravel all this seeming mystery without a suggestion from her if given the time to concentrate his mind on the vague, hazy suggestion that tormented his memory.

He sat down opposite her, and rested his arms on the table. "The lines about his mouth were rigid, uncompromising, but there was a look of wonder in his eyes."

She leaned forward in her chair, the better to watch the changing expression in his eyes as she progressed with her story. Her hands were clenched tightly under the table's edge.

"You are looking into my eyes—as you have looked a hundred times," she said after a moment. "There is something in them that has puzzled you since the night when you looked into them across that great ballroom in London. You have always felt that they were not new to you, that you have had them constantly in front of you for ages. Do you remember when you first saw me, James Brood?"

He stared, and his eyes widened. "I never saw you in my life until that night in London, I—"

"Look closely. Isn't there something more than doubt in your mind as you look into them now?"

"I confess that I have always been puzzled by—by something I cannot understand in— But all this leads to nothing," he broke off harshly. "We are not here to mystify each other but to—"

"To explain mysteries, that's it, of course. You are asking, 'What do you see?' And you don't see that you looked into my eyes long, long ago. Are there not moments when my voice is familiar to you, when it speaks to you out of—"

He sat up, rigid as a block of stone. "Yes, by heaven, I have felt it all along. Today I was convinced that the unbelievable had happened. I saw something that— He stopped short, his lips parted.

She waved her hand in the direction of the Buddha. "Have you never petitioned your too solid friend over there to unravel the mystery for you? In the quiet of certain lonely, speculative hours have you not wondered where you had seen me before—long, long before the night in London? In all the years that you have been trying to convince yourself that Frederic is not your son, has there not been the vision of—"

"What are you saying to me? Are you trying to tell me that you are Matilde?"

"If not Matilde, then who am I, pray?" she demanded.

He sank back, frowning. "It cannot be possible. I would know her a thousand years from now. You cannot trick me into believing— But, in God's name, who are you?" He leaned forward again, clutching the edge of the table. "By heaven, I sometimes think you are a ghost come to haunt me, to torture me. What trick, what magic is behind all this? Has her soul, her spirit, her actual being found a lodging place in you, and have you been sent to curse me for—"

She rose half-way out of her chair, leaning farther across the table. "Yes, James Brood, I represent the spirit of Matilde Valeska, if you will have it so. Not sent to curse you, but to love you. That's the pity of it all. I swear to you that it is the spirit of Matilde that urges me to love you and to spare you now. It is the spirit of Matilde that stands between her son and death. But it is not Matilde who confronts you here and now, you may be sure of that. Matilde loved you. She loves you now, even in her grave. You will never be able to escape from that wonderful love of hers. If there have been times—and heaven knows there were many, I know—when I appeared to love you for myself, I swear to you that I was moved by the spirit of Matilde. I—I am as much mystified, as greatly puzzled as yourself. I came here to hate you, and I have loved you—yes, there were moments when I actually loved you."

Her voice died away into a whisper. For many seconds they sat looking into each other's eyes, neither pos- sessed the power to break the strange spell of silence that had fallen upon them.

"No, it is not Matilde who confronts you now, but one who would not spare you as she did up to the hour of her death. You are quite safe from ghosts from this hour on, my friend. You will never see Matilde again, though you look into my eyes till the end of time. Frederic may see, may feel the spirit of his mother, but you—ah, no! You have seen the last of her. Her blood is in my veins, her wrongs are in my heart. It was she with whom you fell in love and it was she you married six months ago, but now the curtain is lifted. Don't you know me now, James? Can't your memory carry you back twenty-three years and deliver you from doubt and perplexity? Look closely, I say. I was six years old then and—"

Brood was glaring at her as one stupefied. Suddenly he cried out in a loud voice: "Heaven help me, you are—you are the little sister? The little Therese?"

She was standing now, leaning far over the table, for he had shrunk down into his chair.

"The little Therese, yes! Now do you begin to see? Now do you begin to realize what I came here to do? Now do you know why I married you? Isn't it clear to you? Well, I have tried to do all these things so that I might break your heart as you broke hers. I came to make you pay!" She was speaking rapidly, excitedly now. Her voice was high-pitched and unnatural. Her eyes seemed to be driving him deeper and deeper into the chair, forcing him down as though with a giant's hand. "The little, timid, heart-broken Therese who would not speak to you, nor kiss you, nor say good-by to you when you took her darling sister away from the Bristol in the Katterberg more than twenty years ago. Ah, how I loved her—how I loved her! And how I hated you for taking her away from me. Shall I ever forget that wedding night? Shall I ever forget the grief, the loneliness, the hatred that dwelt in my poor little heart that night? Everyone was happy—the whole world was happy—but was I? I was crushed with grief. You were taking her away across the awful sea—and you were to make her happy, so they said—at—e, so said my beloved, joyous sister. You stood before the altar in St. Stephen's with her and promised—promised—promised everything. I heard you. I sat with my mother and turned to ice, but I heard you. All Vienna, all Budapest said that you promised naught but happiness to each other. She was twenty-one. She was lovely—ab, far lovelier than that wretched photograph lying there in front of you. It was made when she was eighteen. She did not write those words on the back of the card. I wrote them—not more than a month ago, before I gave it to Frederic. To this house she came twenty-three years ago. You brought her here, the happiest girl in all the world. How did you send her away? How?"

He stirred in the chair. A spasm of pain crossed his face. "And I was the happiest man in all the world," he said hoarsely. "You are forgetting one thing, Therese. He fell into the way of calling her Therese as if he had known her by no other name. 'Your sister was not content to preserve the happiness that—'"

"Stop!" she commanded. "You are not to speak evil of her now. You will never think evil of her after what I am about to tell you. You will curse your self. Somehow, I am glad that my awakening—the gathering together of the loyal princes and governors, yes, and of penmen, scorn for the faint-hearted, curses for the treacherous—Ashor, Reuben, Meroz.

From these the song flames up again into imaginative splendor, with its stars and prancing, narrows its view to the tent of Joel, to the mother of Sisera harkening in vain at her winnowing for the sound of the chariot wheels and the son that will never return, and sinks like the peace of evening to its close: "So let all time enemeas perish, O Lord; but let them that love him be as the sun when he goeth forth in his might." There is no patriotic poem to compare with it.

Restrictive Sale of Weapons. A Greek law of July 34, 1914, prohibits the importation, manufacture and sale of certain weapons, including shotguns, daggers and spring or double-edged pocket knives. The importation of firearms of all kinds without government permission is likewise prohibited.

Why do you advocate blanket street-paving bills?"

"To cover the beds of the streets, of course."

All Must Be Well.

If I believe in God, in a being who made me and fashioned me, and knows my wants and capacities and necessities, because he gave them to me, and who is perfectly good and loving, righteous, and perfectly wise and powerful—whatever my circumstances inward or outward may be, however thick the darkness which encompasses me, I yet can trust, you be assured, that all will be well, that he can draw light out of darkness, and make crooked things straight.—Thomas Erskine.

Reputation is what men and women think of us; character is what God and the angels know of us.—Thomas Vaine.

plans have gone awry. It gives me the opportunity to see you curse yourself."

"Her sister!" uttered the man unbelieveably. "I have married the child Therese. I have held her sister in my arms all these months and never knew it. It is a dream. I—"

"Ah, but you have felt even though—"

He struck the table violently with his fist. His eyes were blazing. "What manner of woman are you? What were you planning to do to that unhappy boy—her son? Are you a fiend to—"

"In good time, James, you will know what manner of woman I am," she interrupted quietly. Sinking back in the chair she resumed the broken strain, all the time watching him through half-closed eyes. "She died ten years ago. Her boy was twelve years old. She never saw him after the night you turned her away from this house. On her deathbed, as she was releasing her pure, undeluded soul to God's keeping, she repeated to the priest who went through the unnecessary form of absolving her—she repeated her solemn declaration that she had never wronged you by thought or deed. I had always believed her, the holy priest believed her, God believed her. You would have believed her, too, James Brood. She was a good woman. Do you hear? And you put a curse upon her and drove her out into the night. That was not all. You persecuted her to the end of her unhappy life. You did that to my sister!"

"And yet you married me," he muttered thickly.

"Not because I loved you—oh, no! She loved you to the day of her death, after all the misery and suffering you had heaped upon her. No woman ever endured the anguish that she suffered throughout those hungry years. You kept her child from her. You denied him to her, even though you denied him to yourself. Why did you keep him from her? She was his mother. She had borne him, he was all hers. But no! It was your revenge to deprive her of the child she had brought into the world. You worked deliberately in this plan to crush what little there was left in life for her. You kept him with you, though you branded him with a name I cannot utter; you guarded him as if he were your most precious possession and not a curse to your pride; you did this because you knew that you could drive the barb more deeply into her tortured heart. You allowed her to die, after years of pleading, after years of vain endeavor, without one glimpse of her boy, without ever having heard the word mother on her lips. That is what you did to my sister. For twelve long years you gloated over her misery. Oh, God, man, how I hated you when I married you!" She paused breathless.

"You are creating an excuse for your devilish conduct," he exclaimed harshly. "You are like Matilde, false to the core. You married me for the luxury I could provide, notwithstanding the curse I had put upon your sister. I don't believe a word of what you are saying to—"

"Don't you believe that I am her sister?"

"You—yes, by heaven, I must believe that. Why have I been so blind? You are the little Therese, and you hated me in those other days. I remember well—"

"A child's despairing hatred because you were taking away the being she loved best of all. Will you believe me when I say that my hatred did not endure for long? When her happy, joyous letters came back to us filled with accounts of your goodness, your devotion, I—I allowed my hatred to die. I forgot that you had robbed me, I came to look upon you as the fairy prince, after all. It was not until she came all the way across—"

"Ocean and began to die before our eyes—she was years in dying—it was not until then that I began to hate you with a real, undying hatred."

"And yet you gave yourself to me," he cried. "You put yourself in my place. In heaven's name, what was to be gained by such an act as that?"

"I wanted to take Matilde's boy away from you," she hurried on, and for the first time her eyes began to waver. "The idea suggested itself to me the night I met you at the countess's dinner. It was a wonderful, a tremendous thought that entered my brain. At first my real self revolted, but as time went on the idea became an obsession. I married you, James Brood, for the sole purpose of hurting you in the worst possible way; by having Matilde's son strike you where the pain would be the greatest. Ah, you are thinking that I would have permitted myself to have become his mistress, but you are mistaken. I am not that bad. I would not have damned his soul in that way. I would not have betrayed my sister in that way. Far more subtle was my design. I confess that it was my plan to make him fall in love with me and in the end to run away with him, leaving you to think that the very worst had happened. But it would not have been as you think. He would have been protected, my friend, simply protected. He—"

"But you would have wrecked him—don't you see that you would have wrecked the life you sought to protect? How utterly blind and unfeeling you were. You say that he was my son and Matilde's, honestly born. What was your object, may I inquire, in striking me at such cost to him? You would have made a scoundrel of him for the sake of a personal vengeance. Are you forgetting that he regarded himself as my son?"

Perils of College Life for One Who Is Not a Christian

By REV. HOWARD W. POPE
Superintendent of Men, Moody Bible Institute of Chicago

TEXT—Having no hope, and without God in the world.—Ephesians 2:12.

1. Without Christ you can never have a satisfactory philosophy of life.

"When did I come? What am I here for? Whither am I going? These are questions which will forever remain unanswered. Life will be an enigma, and doubts will darken your dying hour. Become acquainted with Christ and doubts begin to disappear. You see what you ought to be. You also discover how this change is to be wrought—through Christ's death for you on the cross, and the reproduction of his life in you by the Holy Spirit. This is no dream or fiction, but a blessed reality, and he who commits the keeping of his life to the Lord Jesus will soon find it so.

2. Without Christ you can never do your best work. You have insatiable cravings which no one can satisfy but the Lord Jesus. You have a fund of energy which no one can dispel, and powers of usefulness which no one can develop so well as the Saviour. Jesus Christ is an indispensable to a thinking man as quinine is to a feverish patient.

Consider too the inconsistency of regarding all creation facts, and yet ignoring the greatest fact in the world's history that Christ died and rose again. This alone, the best attested fact in history, makes the appeal to become a Christian supremely rational. If you refuse the appeal, it devolves on you to give the reasons why.

3. One's capacity to know God weakens by disuse, and may be utterly lost. Charles Darwin said in early life, 'I believe God will reveal himself to every individual soul, and my most passionate desire is a deeper and clearer vision of God. But one can easily lose all belief in the spiritual by giving up the continual thought and care for spiritual things.' Near the end of his life he said, 'In my younger days I was deeply religious, but I made my mind a kind of machine for grinding out general laws in the material world, and my spiritual nature atrophied.' His last days were clouded with sadness and spiritual gloom.

Rev. J. Douglass Adam, D. D., of New York, said at a Northfield conference a few years ago, 'A friend of mine was once on a parliamentary commission with Prof. T. H. Huxley. They happened to stay at a little country inn over Sunday. Huxley said to my friend, 'I suppose you are going to church this morning?'

"I am; I always go to church."

"I know you do," said Huxley, "but suppose this morning you sit down and talk with me about religion—simple experimental religion."

"I will," said my friend, "if you mean it."

"They sat down together, and my friend told him of a deep and rich experience told him of the cross of Christ and pardoning love, and after three hours tears stood in Huxley's eyes and he put out his hand and said, 'If I could only believe that, I would be willing to give my right hand.' What do you call that, but intellectual imprisonment? Huxley was perhaps the greatest scientific enemy of Christianity in our generation."

"The same friend told me that again and again Mr. John Morley would come to him in the lobby of the house of commons, and put his hand in his and say, 'I want you to pray for me. I am going to Ireland on important executive business, and I want your prayers.' Morley is perhaps the leading literary agnostic today."

What a pitiful picture! Two masterful minds so imprisoned by reason that they could not believe! Conscious of their need of God, and yet not knowing how to approach him! A dying man once said to the writer, 'I know I ought to turn to God, but I have had my own way so long that now I lack the power to turn. I have lost control of my own will and I must die as I have lived.'

The conclusion is this, that every student ought to accept Christ, and ought to do it now. If he waits five years, the chances are that he will never do it. Every year that he puts it off he loses something of his capacity to discern spiritual truth, and to feel its force.

Every man wishes to make the most of himself. The only possible way to do this is to decide now, for every moment some part of his inheritance is slipping away, never to be regained. Strictly speaking, it is NOW or NEVER.

"Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation." (II Cor. 6:2.)

SCULPTOR TALKS OF POPE

Man Who Made Bronze Bust of Head of Church Impressed With His Appearance.

Raffaello Romagnoli, the Florentine sculptor, who was summoned from Perugia to Rome to make a bust in bronze of Pope Benedict, gives an interesting account of his work in the Vatican.

The pope refused to sit more than three times, and even then the sitings were short. When the cast was shown him the pontiff expressed himself well pleased, gave the artist an autograph portrait and said:

"I thank God that I am now done with all painters and sculptors. You are the only one who has had three sittings. Now, go. You have my benediction."

Romagnoli describes the pope's features thus:

"His holiness has a most interesting head—large forehead and cranial characteristic of a serene, well-balanced mind. The aquiline nose and deep-set eyes show force of character and intelligence; the eyes, though short-sighted, gleam with intelligence. The large, well-shaped mouth shows constancy of purpose. The chin is prominent, of the classical shape of Julius Caesar's and Napoleon's."

His intent.

"See how that dog is licking your hand."

"I suppose he wants to stamp me with his approval!"

Some Don'ts For Girls.

Here are Dr. Memminger's of Atlanta, "Don'ts" for sweet girl graduates venturing upon the voyage of life.

Don't give up church attendance to play golf.

Don't let social attractions lure you away from teaching in Sunday school.

There is a double standard of morals for men and women. Don't lower your standards for the false standards of men.

Don't sip high-balls and drink cocktails to please men.

Don't try to keep the love of any man by playing cards for money.

Deep down in their hearts men don't respect you for doing those things.

Ten Big Elephants Play War Saturday, July 10th.

While the whole world is thinking, talking and reading of the greatest of all wars the world has ever known, Capt. Joe Bell, the peer of all wild animal trainers, had mobilized Robinson's 10 big elephants with the Robinson's 10 big shows, and after daily drilling and maneuvering in the winter quarters, the past winter, Capt. Bell has, without the fear of contradiction, more than upheld his title of master animal trainer.

The Robinson 10 big war elephants not only drill, but dig trenches, fire cannon, play dead, and last but not least, when the stars and stripes have been torn from its lofty perch by the hostile foe, ding dong, the largest and oldest elephant in captivity, rushes in, and amid much commotion, raises Old Glory to the topmost peak of the circus white-top.

This is the best trained elephant act in America, and is very interesting, and is positively the only original elephant war act with any circus. The Robinson's shows originate many things that other shows try to imitate. Robinson's 10 big war elephants will positively appear both afternoon and night with Robinson's 10 big shows, in Grayling, Saturday, July 10.

A very pretty party was given by Gordon Chamberlin at his home last Friday evening, the occasion being his sixteenth birthday, about twenty-five of his classmates being present to help him celebrate. Cards, music and a guessing contest furnished the amusement of the evening, first prizes being won by Alice Brink and Lewis Burton, and second prizes by Vita Fischer and Carleton Meistrup. In the dining room the color scheme was carried out in pink and white, the centerpiece for the table being a large basket filled with pink carnations and asparagus fern. Festoons of pink hung from the chandelier to the corners of the table. The birthday cakes were white, each holding sixteen pink candles. A dainty lunch was served, after which much fun was enjoyed by the reading of verses found at each place, and which were characteristic to each guest. The favors were tiny candlesticks, holding pink candles. The host received many pretty gifts. The guests left at a late hour, after having spent a very enjoyable evening.

The members of the Loyal Order of Moose had a pleasant time at their rooms Monday evening. An initiation was held in the lodge, after which an elaborate fish fry was served. Members of the lodge preambulated to the various streams Sunday, and when they arrived home in the evening a total catch of 175 trout and 45 bass was counted. The supper was a fine one and was prepared by John Hodge and Morris Burroughs, who thoroughly convinced the sixty-five members present that they are some chefs when it comes to a fish fry.

So much has been said about the "sane 4th" that it seems hardly necessary to repeat any of the reasons why people should be careful at this time regarding fireworks and explosives generally. Not only are fireworks dangerous to human lives but also there is great danger of fires. We wish respectfully to caution parents in regard to their children. Minus fingers, eyes and perhaps lives may be the result of allowing young children to use any explosives that may be dangerous. Kindly think these warnings over carefully and plan to spend the 4th in a sane fashion and remember all the times, "safety first."

"Don't drive in the rut" and "Please keep out of the rut" are signs that are seen along good highways. This idea is rather new here and few auto owners realize how much better the roads become if they will make it a regular habit of not driving in the other fellow's track. The road becomes wider and smoother and round. The road between here and Frederic is being improved, also the Portage lake road and the roadways in the Military reservation, so why not every driver make a special effort to "keep out of the rut" and encourage others to do the same, while traveling these new highways. The same idea will hold good on other roads besides those mentioned here. "Please don't drive in the rut."

Work on the new school house is progressing finely and already the cement foundations are in and the wall laid to the height of about six feet. The brick that is being used is showing up nicely and when the building is finished will have a beautiful appearance. Mr. Lather, the contractor, says that they are ahead of their schedule in construction and, barring any unforeseen accidents and bad weather, will have the building finished earlier than specified. The enormous steel I-beam girders that are to be used to span the ceilings of the gymnasium and assembly rooms have arrived and are at the M. & N. E. depot. They are ten in number and measure 66 feet in length and are 38 inches high and weigh 5 tons each. It required two flat cars to carry them. Also the steel heating boiler has arrived and the heating system contractor is expected soon to begin installing the heating and ventilating plant.

DENMARK.

In the harbor of Randers a piece of work is going on which always keeps a large crowd of spectators at the place. New breakwaters are to be built. But before this can be done the old piling must be removed. This is done by a steamer in the following manner: A heavy chain is put around the pile under the water and fastened to the prow of the steamer, which has been lowered as much as possible. After this is done the stern of the steamer is loaded by means of water being pumped into it. At first the pile does not stir. But after a little while the strain becomes too great, and the bottom of the harbor yields inch by inch, until finally the pile slips up through the water with a jump. The name of the steamer is Bjorn (bear), and the people call it "Dentist Bjorn."

The Danish rigsdag, on June 5, the anniversary of the signing of the first constitution by Frederick VII. in 1849, unanimously passed the new constitution which confers the suffrage on women and abolishes the special electoral privileges heretofore exercised by the wealthier classes. The king signed the constitution in the afternoon.

A large number of women composed of all classes marched to the palace, where King Christian received a deputation which, in behalf of the women of Denmark, thanked him for their political emancipation. A deputation of women also went to the rigsdag and thanked the government for conferring the franchise on women.

The king gave a reception to the members of the rigsdag.

Three Germans, who described themselves as C. Gumprecht and T. Hauff of New York and H. Haan of Copenhagen, were arrested at Saaby, Denmark. They are reported to have been concerned in a plan to effect the escape of the interned German officers of the two Zeppelins which were wrecked last February off the Danish coast.

Soldiers who are owners or managers of farms or gardens are permitted to spend from one to three weeks at home in order to tend to their most necessary spring work. The military authorities go by the recommendations of the local governments in this matter.

SWEDEN.

It is just two hundred years since Sweden issued what was popularly called "distress coins." Wars had depleted the national treasury, and 500,000 copper coins were issued in place of so many silver dollars, worth about fifty-four cents. The business men did not accept the copper coins at their face value, and the government had no end of trouble in getting out of the difficulty. It was Baron George Henrik von Gortz who was responsible for this way of building up the credit of the country. The king, Karl XII, seems to have realized the shakiness of the Gortz plan, but he finally indorsed it in a half-hearted way. But neither the picture of the king nor the arms of Sweden appeared on the coins. At this day, 200 years later, Sweden has no war of her own. But even now the war amongst her neighbors has affected her finances so far as to compel her to issue one krona (27 cents) treasury notes, which would not have been thought of if it had not been for the war. It should be added, however, that the present bills are entirely different from and infinitely safer than the Gortz copper coins of 200 years ago.

A summer school is in operation in East Grevie. This would not have been mentioned if it had not been an ordinary school of that kind. But the main branches taught seem to be geology, the history of literature, the art of painting and local government. The teachers are accomplished scholars.

A very interesting archeological find has been made in Tensta parish, Uppland. It is a burial chamber lined with wood and dating from the second century of the Christian era. Close by is also a cremation tomb from the same period. Both tombs contained bronze objects of Roman origin.

So-called war bread is now on the market in ten or more of the largest cities of Sweden, and other cities are expected to be added. The price is a trifle over five cents a pound for large loaves, and still more for small loaves.

Three of the children of Rev. and Mrs. G. Hornstrom of Nastra are attending the university, and two more are ready to enter. This means that next year they will have five children at the university. One of them is a girl.

The new five per cent loan was oversubscribed to the extent of $2,000,000, and all bids exceeding $5,000 were cut down 15 per cent. The whole loan amounts to about $20,000,000.

A number of Swedish physicians and nurses are doing fine work in the military hospitals of Vienna. They report that the hospitals are well equipped for handling the wounded.

The United Match factories of Sweden have declared a dividend of seven per cent for the past year.

NORWAY.

The great nations of the world are paying serious attention to Dr. Sigurd Ibsen's discussion of international warfare at the present time. He says in part:

"The right to wage war at sea must be regulated anew. However uncertain the obligations were in the past, there were certain limitations which could not be overstepped. But it seems that at present there is no limitation to the claim of every state to do as it pleases. The trade and the shipping of neutral countries have become humiliating. The sinking of enemy merchant ships, which formerly was allowed only when unavoidable, has now become a regular practice. This condition of things is due to the working of two factors. Sea warfare has become a much more intensive way than heretofore anyone could have believed, a battle of financial weapons. A bitter fight for the means of existence. The modern means of war, in particular the submarines and mines, has developed a kind of war which is without precedent in former history and which falls by necessity outside the range of international law, which was adapted to conditions very different from the present. All this must be put right at the next Hague conference. No one can say what regulations will be drawn up for contraband, blockades and other matters of this kind, or what code of conduct can be drawn up for combatants in this sphere of warfare, or what can be conceded to neutrals. These regulations must be drawn up in the light of experience and according to the power and influence which different states or groups of states can exercise. Anything, however, will be better than the present loose arrangement."

Ibsen maintains that international rights have been ignored by the French and English in their treatment of enemy subjects and enemy property in their countries.

As to humanizing warfare, Ibsen has little hope of international law being able to accomplish much. "Warfare, instead of being humanized," he remarks, "must necessarily become more and more frightful, in accordance with the ceaseless development of technical skill in the provision of new and more perfect weapons. It is an illusion to believe that war can be waged in gentler fashion. There is only one proposition worth considering, and that is to see that no occasion arises for war. This, however, is not the work of international lawyers, but of politicians and diplomats."

The discussion of the communions cup from a sanitary point of view has caused an upheaval among the church people of Norway which is assuming serious proportions. It has been demonstrated that the common cup may carry contagious diseases from one communicant to another. The actual cases may be rare. But the fact once established, the people will not leave the matter alone until it is settled in a manner which will satisfy the great mass of the people. The church department has authorized no less than three patterns of individual communion cups and a ladle for filling them. The cups are made of solid silver, but plated ware may, of course, be used. An ordinance provides that two boards or shelves shall be put up by the side of the altar for holding the individual cups. But in a number of churches there is no place for such shelves, and the reform as a whole is received with no such thing as enthusiasm by those who actually take part in the communion service. Some of the opponents of these innovations predict with indignation that such fanatics will tend to destroy the sacrament of the altar altogether.

A Viking ship, manned by 50 Norsemen clad in replicas of ancient suits of armor, sailed in San Francisco harbor the other day, her quaint sails aided by oarsmen, figuratively invading America for the celebration of Norway day at the Panama-Pacific exposition. An impersonator of Leif Erikson, standing at the high prow, sang Grieg's "Laudkjending," and was answered by a chorus of thousands of Norwegians on shore.

Mal. James Rolff, Jr., Norwegian commissioner, exposition officials and emissaries of King Haakon VII. of Norway, greeted the Vikings.

Several thousand members of Norwegian societies from all portions of the United States were here to participate in the ceremonies. At the Norway pavilion, P. Herman Gade, commissioner general for his country at the exposition, planted a Norwegian spruce brought from Christiania for the purpose. Officials of the Norwegian Evangelical Lutheran synod in America, in convention in San Francisco, participated in the ceremonies.

The Norwegian steamship Cubano was torpedoed and sunk off the Planan Islands. The crew was landed in the Hebrides, a group of islands off the west coast of Scotland.

Our Agricultural Possibilities. With improvements which are steadily being made in American agriculture under the stimulus of a number of helpful agencies, including the department of agriculture and the land-grant colleges, the chances for successful competition from abroad will become smaller and smaller. We must remember that not over 45 per cent of our arable land is yet under cultivation, and that not more than 12 per cent of that is yielding full returns.—David F. Houston in the American Review of Reviews.

Safety First.

One evening, in the card room of a certain club, a man was caught cheating and exposed before the whole company, whereupon the indignant members rose in a body and kicked him from the top of the stairs to the bottom. Rising painfully, and full of wrath, he hobbled away to the residence of the president of the club, and there complained of the treatment he had received. "What would you do in my place?" he asked. "Well," said the president, "I should play on the ground floor in future—it's safer."

Serge Outing Suit With Braid Binding

To be practical for all the demands of a journey, long or short, to be comfortable, are the ends sought for in this suit of good wear-resisting serge. It is one of the plainest and quietest of models and is presented for the consideration of those who are preparing for a summer outing which may take them over land and sea, in cities or to the wilderness.

An easy adjustment to the figure, a certain masculine severity and simplicity of line in this suit, have resulted in meeting that demand for a combination of the smart and practical.

The skirt is plaited with a straight panel down the front and back having two wide plaits at each side. It is cut ankle length and finished with a three-inch hem. There are small pockets at each side and the waist extends three inches above the normal waist line. The short skirt is the only one really to be considered for a journey or for street wear in a city.

The coat is a box model with double breast when fastened at the front. It opens with long revers and is furnished with pockets at the sides and an inside pocket for convenience, such as are found in men's coats. The sleeves are long and plain, having cuffs finished with braid and three bone buttons like those used for the fastening at the front of the coat. A plain full blouse of white crepe de chine, open at the throat, has a wide collar of black-and-white wash silk and a small cravat bow of the silk as a finish. It fastens at the front with square buttons of black jet.

A well-fitting Panama hat, with band of black-and-white ribbon, short white washable gloves with black stitching, and cloth-topped shoes complete the details of a costume in which the traveler will feel at ease wherever her wanderings may carry her.

Headwear Made of Cotton Fabrics

Whether to be worn to gather vegetables or flowers from the garden or to go a marketing in the morning or for the drive about the country every woman wants becoming headwear. And it seems she is destined to be gratified, for the garden hats and sunbonnets of today are as carefully planned as the dress hats with which fair women fortify themselves to meet the critical eyes of their peers.

Cretonnes, gingham, chambrays, and new fancy cotton weaves have been brought into unfamiliar service and used in new ways to evolve the home-made headwear that is illustrated in the picture given here. Even the plain little sunbonnet manages to be becoming and pretty, while it fulfills its mission of shading the eyes and protecting the neck.

Some of the new cotton fabrics, such as cotton gabardine or cotton poplin, are of just the right weight and body for these pretty bonnets. Plain white tape or binding braid makes an attractive finish and adds to the firmness of edges and shapeliness of the capes and brims. There is quite a variety in paper patterns for making them and they are designed to be easily laundered. There are the time-honored gingham and chambrays, more beautifully colored than ever, to be used, and combinations of plain and figured fabrics where a fanciful bonnet for the beach or mountain road is required.

A garden hat is shown made of plain chambray for the brim, with a puffed crown made of figured cretonne. One hardly needs a pattern for a hat so simple as this, but the standard pattern companies furnish such patterns. The brim is a circle of butcher's linen covered with the plain chambray on both sides. It is stiffened with rows of machine stitching. The crown in this hat is made of a small circular piece of the linen covered with cretonne, with a puff of the cretonne gathered into it. The lower edge of the puff is turned up and gathered and sewed to the brim. There is a band of little braid about the crown, finished with a little bow having double loops. Gayly flowered small figured cretonnes are used with plain goods of the same color as that prevailing in the cretonne.

The black-and-white checked hat is part hat and part bonnet in design. A stiffened cape at the back may be either turned up or down, and fastens by means of a loop to a button on the visor at the front. Bright red, green, or black braid is used for the binding and the crown is a circle plaited into the band at its base. Machine stitching and an interlacing of butcher's linen provide the requisite stiffness for the brim and cape.

JULIA BOTTOMLEY.

Molasses Tarts.

Make a good short paste and roll out twice to about half an inch in thickness, putting a little butter and lard on it each time. Grease well an oval dish and line with the pastry. Put one-half cupful of molasses in a basin and stir in a few very finely grated bread crumbs. Pour some of this into the dish, then another layer of pastry and continue until the dish is full. Wet the edge of the pastry with milk and pinch. Bake in a moderate oven until brown. This is a delicious molasses tart if carefully made and baked, and the molasses does not run out and burn.

Homemade Towels.

A fad has developed among fastidious women for making their own towels. They buy for the purpose fine French bird's-eye and French huck for their own personal use and German huck for general family use. Of course, the fancy towels, which are lace trimmed and embroidered, are not honestly practical.

SOME OF THE OLD "TIPPLES"

Early Housekeepers Had Many Recipes That Have Been Handed Down to Posterity.

Whether there will be a revival during the next few years of the domestic art of making wine is a matter of pure conjecture, but it is interesting to recall that formerly many common things that grow around us were utilized by thrifty housewives in the preparation of "tipples" that were more or less mild or more or less potent. Generally the wine-making possibilities of these things are little thought of now, and in most homes, even in country homes, wine-making processes have been forgotten.

Reference has recently been made to the making of dandelion wine, a sweet and potent wine prepared with the aid of the golden flowers of the dandelion. Elderberry wine and elderflower wine were made in most of the rural homes in the Potomac country a generation or so ago. Blackberries were gathered industriously by the children for conversion into jam and wine or cordial, and raspberries were especially sought after that wine could be made from them. It is probable that in the minds of elderly persons today there is preserved a better memory of raspberry vinegar than of raspberry wine, for it was popularly believed that raspberry vinegar was superior to that made from apples.

In cherry time the fruit was treasured because it could be preserved or converted into a familiar tippie called "cherry bounce," a drink which at certain stages of its "aging" or development was exhilarating and intoxicating.

The flavor of gooseberry wine was known and esteemed by most of the grandmothers and grandfathers of present Washingtonians.

On all the old farms there was a little distillery, though on some farms it was not so little, just as there was an icehouse and a smokehouse, where the peaches and apples and grapes could be distilled into fruit brandy.

Cider-making was a ceremony, and in the late fall when frost had pinched and somewhat shriveled the persimmons a strange potation called persimmon beer was made.

Parsnip wine was made by British housewives before emigration to America set in, and the art of making this wine was brought over by the early immigrants. There was also in colonial times in America a drink which was called peppermint wine, or peppermint liqueur.

LETTUCE FOR THE TABLE

Much Depends on its Proper Preparation and Arrangement When it is Served.

When lettuce comes from the market, clean in cold water and look it over carefully to see that all dirt and insects are removed. Place on a piece of dampened cheesecloth, then roll up and put on the ice, when it will be ready for use and will often stay fresh for a week. Some persons complain of sleepiness after eating lettuce. This is due to the lactucin in lettuce, which the milky juice contains. This juice may be removed by cutting from the lettuce the lower end of the heads or stalks and then standing the lettuce in cold water for several hours before using. Keep the head intact when you wish to quiet the nerves or to induce sleep.

The following is a pretty lettuce relish for luncheon or dinner and may be served in a small cut glass dish: Line the dish with lettuce leaves upon which place either ripe or green olives and tiny red tomatoes. Chill with cracked ice. The olives and tomatoes may be taken with the fingers at any time during the meal.

Hot-Water Platter.

Those who have to solve the problem of cold dining rooms, especially at breakfast time, will find greater comfort in the use of the hot-water platter. Boiling water is turned into the tank under the platter and the top screwed on. Then the nickel cover is placed over the food, which keeps hot and in perfect order for at least thirty minutes. The original outlay seems a little large, as the medium-sized outfit costs about nine dollars, but with careful use it will repay one in the comfort of hot meals. There is also the round hot-water plate which is excellent for the breakfast tray or invalid's use.

Shells for Lemon Pie.

Try my way of making the shell for the lemon pie, and I think that you will be pleased. First I should not put in the baking powder. Turn your deep pie plate upside down, put your crust over what should be the bottom of the tin, pat it so that it fits close. Then turn edges, pick and bake. It will turn out perfect and bake better not having so much bottom heat, because it is raised from the oven floor.—Exchange.

Tomato Squares.

Mix two cupfuls tomato, four cloves, two slices onion, two peppercorns, half teaspoonful salt and one-quarter teaspoonful paprika. Cook ten minutes, press through a sieve. Melt three tablespoonfuls butter, add one-quarter cupful cornstarch and strained tomato mixture; boil ten minutes. Cool slightly, add one egg, pour into buttered pan, chill, cut in squares, dip in crumbs, egg and crumbs, fry in deep fat. Drain on brown paper. Serve.

Purée of Baked Beans.

Put two cupfuls of baked beans into a saucepan, add small piece of pork. If you have it, cover with two quarts hot water, season with pepper and salt and add one-half onion. If you do not use the pork add one tablespoonful butter, boil until the beans are very soft, then press through a sieve and serve.

Cantaloupe Frape.

Three pints of cantaloupe pulp, two cupfuls sugar, the juice of two lemons or one-half cupful lemon juice and pass through a very fine sieve. Freeze as usual. Serve from glass cups or from the chilled rind of the melon, shaped into a basket.

Canada is Calling You to her Rich Wheat Lands

She extends to Americans a hearty invitation to settle on her FREE Homestead lands of 160 acres each or secure some of the low priced lands in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

This year wheat is higher but Canadian land just as cheap, so the opportunity is more attractive than ever. Canada wants you to help to feed the world by tilling some of her soil—land similar to that which during many years has averaged 20 to 45 bushels of wheat to the acre. Think what you can make with wheat around $1 a bushel and land so easy to get. Wonderful yields also of Oats, Barley and Flax. Mixed farming is fully as profitable an industry as grain growing.

The Government this year is asking farmers to put increased acreage into grain. Military service is not compulsory in Canada. There is no conscription and no war tax on lands. The climate is healthful and agreeable, railway facilities excellent, good schools and churches convenient. The Great Heart-Throb Novel of the Century By Bertha M. Clay

Special Sale Price With Subscription to "The People's Home Journal" for the Remainder of This Year for 25c

"Dora Thorne" is recognized to be one of the most powerful modern novels of the day. Where Soap is of No Use.

Lapland folk never speak of themselves as Laplanders, or Laps; they are the Samelatsch, they say, the unknown people, the people of whom no one knows anything, not even whence they came.

If any mention is made in their presence of Norwegian, Swedish, Finnish or Russian Lapland, their feelings are sorely wounded, for there is only one Lapland, they hold, and it is their land, the land of the Samelatsch.

These folk, as other folk, have their whims and fancies, their little peculiarities, too.

They regard soap, for instance, with profound mistrust, and have no great faith in washing; no faith at all, indeed, in washing in warm water.

As soon as a baby is born they bathe it in cold water; and they bathe it again, always in cold water, every day until, should it live so long, it is two years old. Then the end comes.

The child is pronounced clean for life and has never another bath.

Naturally.

"Many of the patrons of a popular photographer must make his plates suffer."

"Why do you think so?"

"Aren't his plates sensitive?"

Are You a "Philatelist?"

It is interesting to recall the origin of the term philatelist, which is used by devotees of the hobby in preference to the phrase "stamp collector."

The collection of stamps was at first rather in the nature of a schoolboy pastime, and it was left to France to initiate the scientific study of postage stamps as distinguished from their accumulation. A Frenchman, M. Herpin, coined the words "philatelic" and "philatelist," on the basis of two Greek words, and philatelist means, literally, "he who is fond of that which is tax free," the presence of a postage stamp on a letter indicating that the postal dues have been paid in advance. Philatelist is not a beautiful word, but it has at least the merit of being more euphonious than "timbrolologist," which was also suggested at the time.

"There is evidently something wrong with your car," said the meddlesome man, "but I don't know just what it is."

"Don't let that bother you," answered the owner of the car, who had received about all the gratis advice he could stand. "I prefer to find out what is wrong with it myself, even if I have to turn a somersault into a ditch to get the information."

CURIOUS WESTERN FREIGHT TRAIN

The "Western Limited," a Prairie Freight Train Which Makes Regular Trips Between Two Small North Dakota Towns.

One of the most curious-looking freight trains to be found any place in the world makes a regular semi-weekly trip between Williston and Bonetrail, N. D., a distance of 35 miles. It consists of a 40-horse power gasoline tractor and a string of a half-dozen grain wagons, and bears the name of the "Western Limited." Twice each week during the summer months the slow-moving caravan strikes out across the prairie loaded with supplies and various kinds of freight billed for Bonetrail, which is a trading point for a large number of farmers. Williston is the nearest railroad point, so during the harvest season, when freight is heavy, the schedule of the "Limited" is increased to five or six trips a week in order to transport wheat and flax to the railroad.—Popular Mechanics.

BEARS MADE TROUBLE

HAMPERED WORK OF RAILROAD BUILDERS IN ALASKA.

Intense Cold Also Made Construction of White Pass & Yukon Line a Difficult Matter, but It Was Accomplished.

The White Pass & Yukon railroad was built at the time of the famous gold rush and is one of the most remarkable enterprises of its kind in the world. Leaving Skagway it ascends the dreary and dreaded White pass to the headwaters of the Yukon, from which in summer boat may be taken to Dawson City. While making the surveys over the pass and subsequently during the work of construction, the railway builders were brought into close relations with the bears, who were the original inhabitants of the mountain sides along which the line runs.

Prompted by curiosity and hunger, the bears used to investigate the camps of the railway, and soon became so cunning and expert that nothing edible was safe from them unless it was watched day and night. The continuous heavy blasting at first frightened the animals, but they soon learned how to shelter themselves from the falling rocks and stones. They also learned to recognize the warning shouts of the foreman and to post themselves so as to take advantage of the temporary absence of the men in order to steal the contents of their dinner pails.

Actual construction commenced in June, 1898, and trains were running by August 25 over the first 14 miles of the line. The working force had increased to nearly 2,000 men August 8, when the news of the gold discoveries at Atlin reached the construction camps and reduced the number to under 700 in two days. It was October before the working strength could be restored, by which time the work was almost entirely above the timber line and exposed to the full force of the Arctic winter storms. In many places the men had to be roped while working in order to prevent them being blown off the steep mountain sides, where the granite was so smooth and slippery that the only foothold was often obtained from logs chained to thin bars drilled into the rock.

The cold and action of the wind were so intense that the men had to be relieved every hour, as longer exposure numbed not merely their bodies, but their minds, so that they had not sense enough left to tie a knot securely or do other simple things of similar nature. Throughout the winter the thermometer ranged from 20 to 40 degrees below zero, and sometimes even lower, at the construction camps. Nevertheless, the work was pushed rapidly forward, and February 18, 1899, the first train reached the summit of the White Pass, 2,865 feet above sea level and 20 miles from Skagway.

No Boozers on the Lackawanna. Another department of the Lackawanna railroad has dropped the "booze fighter." Now it is the storehouse section of the road's employees which must taboo strong drink. Orders have been issued to all employees in the storehouses that hereafter men who drink intoxicating liquors will not be continued in the service of the company.

The order further states that no men who use liquor will be employed in the future. This action was brought about as the result of a former storehouse employee confessing to wholesale thefts of brass from the company that he might raise funds to continue to enjoy the so-called "high life" which his salary of $60 per month would not permit.—Exchange.

Wants Education.

Antonio Alconco, aged twenty-four, of Sacramento, Cal., who cannot read or write, was given permission to attend the sixth grade of the grammar school as an observer for a month. He said he worked as a mill hand, and had seen the children march and sing, and since then he was not satisfied to attend night school or the cosmopolitan school, but wanted to be with real live American boys and girls.

His Discovery. After a visit to a well-known entomologist, whose wonderful microscopes have proved that there is always some living thing to be found preying on the last of the minutest creatures last seen, a New York writer turned to him and said: "I came here believing myself to be an individual. I leave knowing myself to be a community."

Things to Worry About. The pulse of a kangaroo is only half as fast as that of a man.

UNABLE TO MOVE ENGINES

General Superintendent of Line in Mexico Found Himself in Considerable of a Dilemma.

For weeks the only rail outlet from Mexico City has been a narrow gauge line running by way of the city of Toluca, about fifty miles distant. Recently the military authorities at Mexico City appointed a new general superintendent for this division. When this official made his first inspection trip over the road he found three locomotives on a siding between Toluca and the capital.

Rolling stock of all kinds being greatly needed for bringing in supplies to a starving population, the new division superintendent gave orders to have these locomotives put into commission. Trainmen who attempted to carry out the orders were met by several stern individuals who told them at the point of rifles that the engines must not be moved. "These engines," said the leader of the armed band, "belong to Señorita"—naming a popular young woman of the district. "They were presented to her last week by the general of our brigade. He has detailed us here to watch them. Without her permission the locomotives cannot be moved from here."

The young woman not appearing on the scene, the puzzled superintendent finally gave up the attempt.

New Equipment Ordered. Faith in the stability of returning prosperity is evidenced by the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad company in the solicitation by it of bids for 2,100 new cars, all to be delivered by midsummer, aggregating in value about $3,000,000. In the order for new equipment which the company is preparing to place will be 2,000 steel box cars, 50 steel underframe caboose cars and 50 steel passenger coaches.

"As an illustration of what it costs to keep pace with the necessities for transportation facilities it is interesting to review the equipment purchases of the Northwestern company for the last five years," said an official of that company. "Since 1910 the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad company has expended more than $38,000,000 simply to maintain its rolling stock at a high point of efficiency. Exclusive of the cars for which bids are now being solicited, it bought during that period 24,288 freight cars, 659 passenger coaches, 538 locomotives and 379 work cars. The company is optimistic for the business future of the country and has faith in the stability and integrity in the wave of prosperity which is already beginning to be felt throughout the land."

The Way to Fame. George Whiting, of Whiting & Burt, was standing in front of the Palace Music Hall a few nights ago. Above his head was the name of the team in blazing electric lights. A near-actor with vaudeville aspirations came along and to Whiting said: "Don't see how you get your name up there in the electric lights. I never could do it."

"It's a cinch," answered Whiting. "You see I carry the bulbs with me and all the theater has to pay for is the electricity. That's how I get away with it."

"Well, I'm going to save up enough to buy a lot of bulbs before I go after another stage job," was the reply.—New York Mail.

Claim Prevention.

"Don't talk war; talk claim prevention," was the appeal of the St. Louis and San Francisco railroad to its employees in a campaign to lessen damage claims for careless handling of freight. The rough handling of cars caused the largest number of these claims, 70 per cent of which were for amounts less than $10. The freight handlers and trainmen responded so loyally to the road's appeal that in five months they saved $146,000.

Furnished to Injured Employees. For many years the Pennsylvania railroad has made a practice of providing free to injured employees hospital and doctors' services. When injuries require mechanical appliances are furnished. These include artificial arms, legs, eyes and the like. They are renewed when necessary at the expense of the company.

Opinion Plainly Expressed. The rehearsal had not gone at all to please the stage director, who, at its close, severely and unjustly criticized the leading man. In conclusion he said: "Say, do you think I have been a stage director for fifteen years for nothing?" "I can not say as to that," answered the actor suavely, "but if you haven't, you have cheated the management."

Optimistic Thought. It's an ill turn that does no good to anyone.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the person strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Bilious Attacks.

When you have a bilious attack your liver fails to perform its functions. You become constipated. The food you eat ferments in your stomach instead of digesting. This inflames the stomach and causes nausea, vomiting and a terrible headache. Take Chamberlain's Tablets. They will tone up your liver, clean out your stomach and you will soon be as well as ever. They only cost a quarter. Obtainable everywhere.
